Jurisdictional Sovereignty

A Comparative Analysis of Capillary Wave

and

the Envoy Protocol

Date: November 2025

Abstract

This research examines two frameworks for reclaiming sovereignty from Crown jurisdiction: Clive Edwards' Capillary Wave and the Envoy Protocol developed under the Republic of Old Souls (ROS). Both challenge the presumption of state authority over the living soul, yet they diverge in methodology—Capillary Wave emphasizes spiritual liberation through Biblical law, while the Envoy Protocol constructs a structural and diplomatic remedy grounded in ecclesiastical trust law and international protections. Central to this analysis is the agency relationship between the living soul and the body corporate, which binds the living as surety for a corporate fiction. Rescinding this agency is the key to restoring lawful sovereignty.

1. Introduction

Modern legal systems operate on a duality: the natural person and the legal person. This distinction, deliberately blurred, enables governments to assert control over estates and capacities of living men and women through statutory presumptions. The issuance of a birth certificate creates an artificial corporate entity—a decedent estate—registered under Crown authority. This paper explores how ecclesiastical remedies dismantle these presumptions and restore lawful standing to the living soul.

Research Question:
How do Capillary Wave and the Envoy Protocol differ in their approach to jurisdictional sovereignty and the rescission of agency?

2. Jurisdictional Foundations

- Capillary Wave:
  - Rooted in Biblical Law and divine authority.
  - Advocates moral withdrawal from statutory systems.
  - Remedy: Affidavit of status and repudiation of state fiction.
- Envoy Protocol:
  - Anchored in ecclesiastical trust law and international treaty protections.
  - Elevates the living soul to envoy status under Vienna Convention (1961).
  - Remedy: Trust filings, diplomatic credentials, and assumption of executor authority.

3. The Agency Trap and Its Rescission

3.1 The Law of Agency and Suretyship

- Presumption:
  - The body corporate (created at birth registration) is treated as the principal.
  - The living soul unknowingly acts as the agent and surety for all liabilities of that corporate entity.

3.2 Consequences

- Loss of natural rights.
- Exposure to taxation, penalties, and statutory obligations.
- Treatment as collateral in commercial systems.

3.3 Mechanism of Binding

- Silence and assumption.
- Use of the corporate name (surname).
- Signing as surety on contracts and financial instruments.

3.4 Rescission Process

- Invoke Clausula Rebus Sic Stantibus:
  Rescind contracts formed under false presumption.
- Declaration of Life (1707 Act):
  Rebut presumption of death and restore living status.
- Assume Office of General Executor:
  Occupy the highest lawful position over the estate, removing Crown's standing as executor d'assent tort.
- Envoy Protocol:
  Elevate jurisdiction to ecclesiastical and international level, ensuring immunity and recognition.

4. Comparative Framework

Dimension	Capillary Wave	Envoy Protocol
Source of Law	Divine Law	Ecclesiastical & International Trust
Mechanism	Affidavit & Moral Renunciation	Trust Filings & Diplomatic Credentials
Agency Remedy	Moral repudiation only	Formal rescission via Declaration & Envoy status
Outcome	Spiritual Sovereignty	Operational Sovereignty

---

5. Key Legal Constructs

- Birth Certificate as Corporate Estate:
  Creates a legal fiction treated as a decedent estate under the Cestui Que Vie Acts (1666 & 1707).
- Presumption of Death:
  Crown assumes executor role (d'assent tort) unless rebutted by Declaration of Life.
- Law of Agency:
  Living soul unknowingly acts as agent for corporate fiction, incurring statutory liabilities.

- Clausula Rebus Sic Stantibus:
  Doctrine enabling rescission of contracts formed under false presumption.

6. Remedy Analysis

- Capillary Wave:
  - Moral renunciation of statutory obligations.
  - Emphasis on spiritual stewardship (Leviticus 25:23).
- Envoy Protocol:
  - Declaration of Life under 1707 Act.
  - Assumption of General Executor office.
  - Diplomatic elevation under ecclesiastical jurisdiction, granting immunity and international recognition.

7. Integrated Comparative Matrix

Category	Capillary Wave	Envoy Protocol
Legal Form	Biblical Doctrine	Ecclesiastical Trust & Envoy Status
Jurisdiction	Spiritual / Divine	International Ecclesiastical
Banking	None	Foreign EIN Trust
Taxation	Unlawful	Exempt via trust
Debt Handling	Rejected as fiction	Recouped & discharged
Property Title	God's land only	Trust-held ownership
Court Venue	Biblical law only	Private arbitration
Agency Remedy	Affidavit only	Full rescission & diplomatic immunity
Outcome	Moral sovereignty	Operational sovereignty

8. Discussion

Capillary Wave offers a faith-based remedy, prioritizing moral sovereignty and spiritual accountability. Its strength lies in personal conviction but lacks institutional infrastructure. Conversely, the Envoy Protocol constructs a parallel legal and financial system, leveraging ecclesiastical trust law and diplomatic immunity to achieve functional autonomy. This systemic approach provides enforceable remedies, including credit recoupment, mortgage and debt discharge, private trust treasury and ministry infrastructure. Most importantly, it rescinds the agency relationship, removing the living soul from the role of surety and restoring lawful control over the estate.

9. Conclusion

Both frameworks reject Crown jurisdiction, yet their strategies differ fundamentally:

- Capillary Wave: Internal liberation through Biblical law, without structural rescission of agency.
- Envoy Protocol: External structural autonomy via ecclesiastical and international law, with formal rescission of agency and restoration of executor authority.

For individuals seeking operational sovereignty, the Envoy Protocol offers a comprehensive solution, while Capillary Wave remains a profound spiritual stance.
